

Well... That didn't go too well... In my attempt to be the beacon to guide loss souls from the abyss, I ended up confronted by a total narcissist. Had I known that at the time, I wouldn't have made a careless mistake that lead to me becoming a target. It's funny though... for someone being "miserable", I sure seem to be too trusting.

I genuinely thought I was dealing with an idiot who was just making baseless assumptions about me, but the more I reflect on all the interactions, the more insidious I realize it all is. Not only was it bait for them to constantly twist my words, everything they've accused me of was a psychological projection. Funny thing is, when they've "exposed me", they've unfortunately exposed themselves.

The thing about narcissists is the fact they have a black-and-white mentality; you're either with them or against them, which if you're the latter, you basically deserve to die in their eyes. They have this scarcity mindset where they think everyone is a shitty person who deserves to die. When they accuse someone of something, they're usually the ones who are guilty of the crime they allege, and when you so much as question them or even suggest they're linked to the crimes, they instantly become very defensive, which they'll deflect and project. And when they encounter someone who threatens their image, they will stop at nothing to triangulate and eliminate them. Not to mention, they gave zero identity; they just put on a mask like Patrick Bateman. I can honestly go on forever, but with what I know now, it begs the question: based on what I've learned about narcissists, could it be possible that they were responsible for the scam that happened a couple years ago? It's genuinely hard to say... There's no proof, but that's what my hunch is telling me now, but I need to make sure I'm 100 percent right before I make claims such as this. But if I were right, what do I do with that information? Should I expose them, or should I let it be. Perhaps it's better I leave it; they'll get their karma eventually, that is... if they haven't received it already. Plus, I know that with any attempt I make at exposing them, could easily fly back in my face, and plus... with my account being new, I'd have zero credibility, and if I so much as give a hint of my character-assassinated identity, I could be outed and be character-assassinated as well. I guess with that, it's better that I just stick to my main goal: to share my message with a story. But the way the forum is now, is it worth the trouble with it now turning into the cult of victimhood, with its leader looming in the shadows, ready to either exploit others or... to attack anyone who doesn't conform to their ideology.

Perhaps I'll wait until I publish my work and then do it.