Approved Symptoms
 Although hypothesized to represent one entity, individuals in the presence of DID may have two or more personalities or states of consciousness that may be experienced as distinct and relatively autonomous entities of self. The term "state" refers to the individual's subjective experience of self, which may include a sense of being disconnected from the body, a sense of being an observer of one's own actions, or a sense of being in a different time or place. The term "personality" refers to the individual's sense of self, which may include a sense of being a different person, a sense of being a different age, or a sense of being a different gender. The term "state" and "personality" are used interchangeably in this document.
