vs.

LIONEL FREDERIQUE TARGET

Defendant

) unredacted form. The motion

PLAINTIFF'S EX PARTE MOTION TO REDACT PRIVATE INFORMATION ON CIVIL ACTION COVER SHEET

Plaintiff asks that this Court redact from the Civil Action Cover Sheet Plaintiff's residential address. Plaintiff asks this because the failure to redact the residential address will result in an unwarranted invasion of Plaintiff's privacy. Plaintiff seeks this relief ex parte because Plaintiff has a reasonable belief that if Defendant becomes aware that Plaintiff's personal residence is now publicly available and that Plaintiff fears for disclosure of the address that Defendant will publish Plaintiff's address in online forums.

As explained in the attached Affidavit, Plaintiff has a large online following in the gaming community under a pseudonym. Exhibit A. Plaintiff fears that if and when his followers become aware of this litigation, they will access the online docket and review the filings, which includes the Civil Action Cover sheet that discloses Plaintiff's residential address. Exhibit A. Plaintiff fears that some of his followers may engage in harassing or threatening behavior at Plaintiff's residence. Exhibit A.

As this Court is aware, exemptions to the public records law should be applied in a case-by-case basis. Torres v. Attorney General, 391 Mass 1 (1984). A court may redact such information if the disclosure of information constitutes an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. See Boston Globe Media Partners, LLC v. Department of Public Health, 482 Mass. 427 (2019). To determine this, a court should balance the public interest in obtaining the requested information versus the seriousness of the invasion of privacy. Id. Only if the public interest substantially outweighs the seriousness of the invasion of privacy should a court keep the information public. Id.

Plaintiff cannot discern what value his residential address would be to the public. In weighing the public interest versus the serious harm that could befall Plaintiff if hundreds of thousands of internet users who follow Plaintiff learn of his residential address. Plaintiff therefore asks that the Court redact his residential address from the Civil Action Cover Sheet.

Respectfully Submitted,
